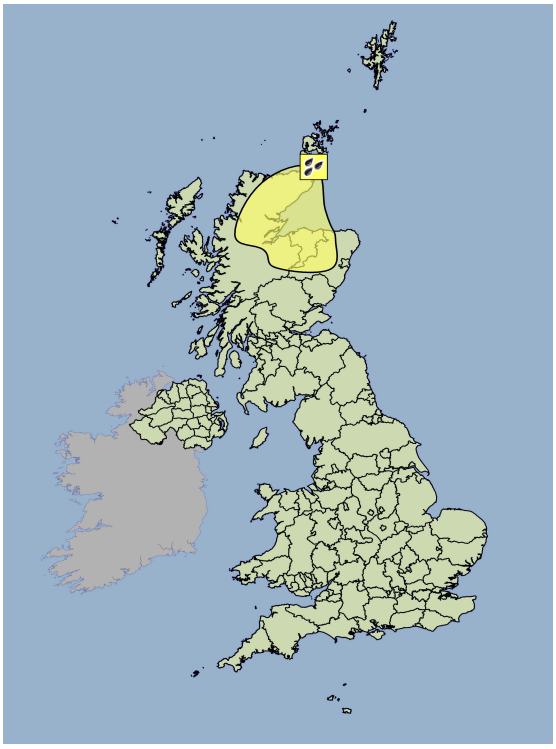
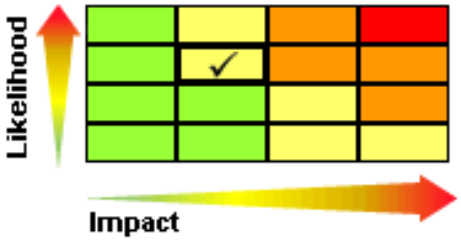
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A small depression that formed close to northeast Scotland on Tuesday in association with a slow-moving frontal zone is still giving some heavy rain. This system is expected to move away slowly northwards through today and the rain will gradually ease.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 01:00 on Wed, 08th Oct 2014 until 12:00 on Wed, 08th Oct 2014

Periods of heavy rain will continue across northern Scotland today, but should gradually ease from the south this morning. A further 20-30 mm is possible in places in addition to that which has already fallen.

The public should be aware that driving conditions will remain hazardous with localised flooding and standing water.

This is an update to the warning originally issued on Monday, removing the reference to the wind warning which has now expired and also removing the Aberdeen area from the warning.
